Origins of the Jayhawk

The Mythical Bird

The term "Jayhawk" has its roots in the late 19th century. It is thought to be a combination of two words: "jay," referring to the blue jay bird, and "hawk," representing a predatory bird. According to some historical accounts, the term originated during the tumultuous period of the Bleeding Kansas era in the 1850s, a time characterized by conflict over slavery and statehood between pro-slavery and anti-slavery factions. The Jayhawk became a symbol of the anti-slavery movement, representing those who fought for freedom and equality.

The First Use of the Jayhawk Symbol

The first official use of the Jayhawk as a mascot for the University of Kansas occurred in the late 1800s. The earliest documented appearance of the Jayhawk as a school mascot was in 1886 when it was adopted by the university's athletic teams.
