

largest blown lead in mlb history

Largest blown lead in MLB history refers to a remarkable and devastating moment in baseball where a team fails to protect a significant lead, resulting in a loss. Such instances not only shock players and fans but also leave a lasting legacy in the annals of Major League Baseball (MLB). This article delves into the largest blown lead in MLB history, exploring the details of the game, the teams involved, and the implications of such an epic collapse.

The Historic Game: Overview

On August 4, 2001, a game between the Seattle Mariners and the Cleveland Indians became the center of attention for all the wrong reasons. The Mariners held a 12-run lead going into the 8th inning, only to watch it vanish in one of the most astonishing comebacks in sports history.