The Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade began in 1924 as a promotional event to kick off the holiday shopping season. Founded by Macy's employees, many of whom were first-generation immigrants, the parade was designed to celebrate the city's diverse cultures and bring together New Yorkers in a festive spirit. The original parade featured live animals from the Central Park Zoo, floats, and professional balloonists who introduced the first large helium balloons. The event was held in Harlem and ended in front of the Macy's flagship store in Herald Square, a tradition that continues today. Early parades attracted thousands of spectators and quickly became an annual holiday staple in New York City.

Founding Purpose and Initial Reception

The parade was originally conceived to boost morale among Macy's employees and to draw shoppers into the store during the holiday season.
