His father, Karamchand Gandhi, served as the diwan (chief minister) of Porbandar state, exposing young Gandhi to political and administrative affairs early on. Gandhi was a shy and modest child, known for his honesty and simplicity. Despite his reserved nature, he was deeply influenced by the religious teachings and values imparted by his mother, Putlibai, who practiced intense devotion and fasting.

Gandhi's educational journey started in local schools before he traveled to London in 1888 to study law at University College London. His time in England was transformative, exposing him to Western philosophy, ethics, and the principles of justice. He adopted a vegetarian lifestyle and became interested in the teachings of figures like Henry David Thoreau and Leo Tolstoy, which later shaped his ideology. After completing his law degree in 1891, Gandhi returned to India to begin his career as a lawyer, though initial success was limited.
