Understanding the MFT Exam Pass Rate

The mft exam pass rate represents the percentage of candidates who successfully pass the Marriage and Family Therapist licensing exam on their first attempt or overall. This rate varies by jurisdiction, testing period, and candidate demographics. Generally, national average pass rates hover between 60% and 75%, illustrating a moderately challenging exam. Tracking these statistics provides valuable insight for prospective MFTs about the exam's difficulty level and expected outcomes.

Pass rates are often published by state licensing boards or the Association of Marital & Family Therapy Regulatory Boards (AMFTRB), the body responsible for administering the exam. Understanding these rates helps candidates benchmark their preparation and manage expectations.

National vs. State Pass Rates

While national pass rates provide an overall picture, state exam pass rates can differ due to varying requirements and exam versions. Some states may have higher or lower pass rates based on their specific licensing processes or candidate pools. It is essential for candidates to review their state's particular statistics when preparing for the exam.

First-Time vs. Repeat Test Takers

Pass rates also differ between first-time test takers and those retaking the exam.
